Warmer weather means more outdoor fun — but also more pests, allergens, and risks for your pets. Here's how to keep them protected, healthy, and comfortable this season.

Why Spring & Summer Prep Matters

As temperatures rise and outdoor activities increase, pets are exposed to seasonal threats like fleas, ticks, and allergens. These can cause significant discomfort and even serious health issues if not addressed early. Taking proactive steps now can help your pet enjoy the sunshine safely.

Prevent Fleas & Ticks

These tiny pests are more than just annoying — they can transmit dangerous diseases like Lyme disease and cause severe itching or allergic reactions. Using vet-approved flea and tick prevention products can make all the difference.

- Use topical or oral flea/tick medications regularly.
- Check your dog after walks, especially around ears, neck, and between toes.
- Keep grass trimmed and shaded areas clean to reduce pest habitats.

Manage Seasonal Allergies

Just like humans, dogs can suffer from seasonal allergies caused by pollen, dust, and mold. Signs include itching, sneezing, watery eyes, and irritated skin.

- Talk to your vet about allergy-friendly medications or supplements.
- Wipe down your pet after outdoor play to remove pollen.
- Bathing your dog with a gentle, allergy-relief shampoo can help.
